TREE FERN STEMS.

We have just received from New Zealand, a shipment of over a thousand Tree Fern stems which have arrived in good condition, and which we offer for a short time in the dormant condition at the following prices.

This is a class of plants which deserves more attention than they have thus far received. They are grand decorative plants, their immense arching fronds, as beautiful separately as any fern, giving them an individuality not enjoyed by any other class of plants, not even the Palm. They are distinct and unique for church or parlor decoration, and as they are not as yet in very general use, will be sure to attract attention anywhere.

CULTURAL DIRECTIONS.

When received the stems should be potted in as small pots as possible and the trunk for about half its length should be wrapped with a layer of moss about an inch thick, loosely held on with wire or cord. The application of water to the top should be avoided until the crowns are formed. They require a temperature similar to palms. With proper culture they will all grow, though we cannot guarantee same.

CYATHEA MEDULLARIS. A tall growing tree fern with fronds often 10 to 12 feet long, twice tripinnate, the pinules serrate in the sterile, pinnately lobed in the fertile fronds; the stems of fronds nearly black, the crown covered with black chaffy hairs. A grand plant for cool treatment.
